HELD UP A TRAIN!

Bold Road Agents Rob an Express Car.

They Rifle the Safe of Its Money and Valuables and Then Escape in the Darkness.

ST. LOUIS, May 12.—Passenger train No. 6, north bound, on the Mobile and Ohio railroad, due here at 7.05 a. m., was held up by four train robbers near Laketon, thirteen miles south of Cairo, Ill., at 10 o'clock last night.

The train consisted of two sleeping cars, one day coach, baggage car and Southern express car. The express car was in charge of Messenger S. H. Ray and a helper named Pearson.

When the train stopped at the water tank one mile south of Laketon, Messenger Ray heard a man climb upon the platform, and, pounding on the door, ordered him to open it. The messenger surmised it was a train robber and told him to "go to h—."

The robber then placed a stick of dynamite under the door, and exploding it, blew out a panel. The explosion scattered all the small packages of envelopes, etc., in every direction and filled the car with smoke. The robber then pushed a Winchester through the aperature and commanded Messenger Ray to unlock the door. The messenger at first refused, but when the robber told him he would kill him if he did not hurry, he obeyed the request and the robber entered the car.

He had a red handkerchief tied across his face, completely hiding his features. One of his accomplices stood guard on the platform with a shot gun and two other confederates kept the train crew at a distance.

The man who entered the car went directly to the safe, the door of which was unlocked, and rifled it of all packages and envelopes supposed to contain money or valuables.

In the meantime Helper Pearson, deeming discretion the better part of valor, hid, taking up a safe position in a remote corner of the car.

After securing all he could conveniently carry, the robber ordered Ray and Pearson to remain in the car or he would fill them full of holes. Both robbers then jumped from the car and joined by their companions, disappeared in the darkness.

The robbery did not occupy more than three minutes, and, before the train crew or passengers realized the situation, the bandits were out of danger. The train reached Cairo at midnight and the robbery was reported to the railway officials, who at once organized a posse and went in search of the robbers. The amount of booty secured will not be known until the way bills are checked up. Superintendent Agee, of the Southern Express company, says the haul did not prove a rich one, as that train rarely carried much valuable matter.

INTERNATIONAL Y. M. C. A.

At the Second Days' Session Numerous Papers are Read.

INDIANAPOLIS, May 12.—The attendance at the second days' session of the Y. M. C. A. convention was much better than the opening session. The delegates were somewhat late in arriving. While waiting for their arrival the convention passed the time in singing hymns, which were led by F. H. Jacobs, of Chicago. Short prayers were offered also. Then came the appointment of the regular standing committees.

Mr. Packard then read a paper on "The Necessity of Thorough Training for the Secretaryship of the Association, and How This May be Secured." Speeches were then made by O. C. Morse, of Springfield, Ohio; John W. Hansell, of the Chicago Training school, and ex President McPheeters.

The afternoon session was not called to order until some little time after the meeting hour. The time was spent by the few who were present in singing and prayer. President Peirce arrived at 2:15 and called the meeting to order, after which a passage was read from the scriptures by L. W. Munhall. This was followed by a prayer and a hymn. A paper was read by Selden P. Spencer, of St. Louis. Addresses were listened to from J. H. McCurdy, of New York.

G. N. Beirce, the new president of the Y. M. C. A., is a thorough business man, being an active partner in the Stillwell & Beirce Manufacturing company, of Springfield, Ohio. He has been connected with the association for twenty years and is at present chairman of the Ohio state committee.

AN OFFICER SHOT

While Attempting to Make an Arrest in Montana.

HELENA, Mont., May 12.—While Deputy Sheriff William Rader, of Meagher county, was trying to arrest William Gay, near Castle, yesterday, Harry Gross, with whom Gay was stopping, drew a gun and shot Rader through the heart, killing him instantly. Gross and Gay jumped on horses and fled. A posse is in pursuit, and more killing is expected. Gay was charged with setting fire to the office of the Castle Reporter.

MEXICAN MOB.

A Desperate Affray During a Holiday Celebration.

DURANGO, Mexico, May 12.—During the Maximilian holiday celebration here a desperate affray occurred between a mob of intoxicated Mexicans and the police, which resulted in the killing of five of the mob and one policeman. The Mexicans were parading the streets, committing depredations of a serious character. When the police attempted to suppress the lawlessness, the mob fired upon the officers, killing Frederico Carralvo and wounding two others. The police returned the fire, killing five leaders of the mob. The others were captured.

EDITORS WHO FIGHT!

A Duel to Take Place Between Two Florida "Colonels."

Personalities in Their Papers Led to It and Now They Want Each Other's Blood.

OCALA, Fla., May 12.—There is intense excitement in this town over the rumor of a duel about to take place between Colonel Harris, of the New Capitol, and Col. Louis J. Brumby, editor of the Free Press. Both papers are published here.

Some rather pointed criticisms, two weeks ago, easily led up to insulting personalities in the columns of their respective papers and yesterday it was stated that both men had appointed seconds to arrange a duel.

Harris sent a friend to see Brumby and requested him to name a friend with whom he might confer in the matter of a settlement of the difficulty. Harris' friend agreed that his principal was ready to fight if agreeable to Brumby. It is the general opinion here that a fight with pistols has already been arranged. Both principals kept closely in doors yesterday, refusing to be interviewed. Both men are being shadowed by the police.

SHOT A THIEF.

Anthony Renka Breaks Into a Russian's Store

With the Intention of Carrying Off Valuables—Instead, the Undertaker Carries Him Off in a Hearse.

DETROIT, Mich., May 12.—Anthony Renka was shot dead by Marion Wieznwaski, a saloonist and grocer at 980 Staubin avenue, about midnight last night while attempting to break into the latter's place. Wieznwaki is in custody and will be held to await the result of the inquest. Wieznwaki was awakened by the sound of a noise as if some one was trying to break into the house. He went downstairs and found that a window had been forced open, but the burglar had disappeared. He armed himself and awaited for the return of the burglar. In twenty minutes a figure stole up to the window, a man put in his head, and, after listening a minute, began to draw himself through the opening. When his body was half way through, Wicznski took deliberate aim and fired, and the burglar fell back dead without so much as a moan. The bullet had crushed through the burglar's brain, striking him fairly between the eyes. The police recognized the dead man as Anthony Renka, aged twenty, a petty thief.

The passengers cheered enthusiastically upon coming into the harbor and the crew of the Campania showed much jubilation over their victory.

THE GREAT FAIR

Is Becoming Better Patronized Each Day.

Exhibitors of Costly Wares Delay Matters Until They are Assured That No Damage to Goods Will Occur.

WORLD'S FAIR GROUNDS, May 12.—There was not much outward sign at the exposition this morning that rain fell almost without cessation yesterday during the time the gates were open. With the exception of the north side of the grand court which is still disfigured with freight cars, signs and mud puddles, the roadways of the park are now impervious to the attacks of the elements. The southern end of the grounds where the forestry, dairy, ethnological, shoe and leather and other buildings are located, has been neglected because the exposition managers considered that popular interest in these exhibits did not warrant immediate completion of buildings, installation or exhibits of roadways. Yet many people are to be seen daily trudging over railroad ties and piles of dirt to view these exhibits. The director general has endeavored to put the forestry and live stock departments on an equal footing with more favored sections of the fair, but he has been prevented by the local director and Burnham, director of works. The archeological exhibits are exclusively representative of the North and South American continents and are more interesting than some exhibits in the central portion of the park, yet they have been relegated to the back yard of the exposition for some reason which does not appear on the surface. One of the new attractions at the opening of the fair today was the sight of two electric fountains on each side of the McMonnies fountain in front of administration building emitting water from thousands of jets high in the air. The McMonnies, which had already been displayed, was also set to playing and added much beauty to the scene. The playing of the fountains attracted large crowds all day, but the sight was nothing compared with the one which will be witnessed by the tens of thousands who are expected to visit the fair on the second open night, tomorrow. On that occasion the three fountains at the west end of the grand basin will not only be in operation but, the electrical devices which will cast all the colors of the rainbow upon the ascending and descending sprays of water is to be shown for the first time. In addition the electrical illumination will be in every part of the white city and the Midway plaisance as the mechanical arrangements are now complete. Hundreds of men were at work today on the roofs of buildings where the rain came through yesterday, closing the leaks. One reason why many exhibits are not installed is that the owners refuse to expose their costly wares to be damaged by water until they are thoroughly satisfied after several rainy experiences that the roof over their booths and show cases is actually and permanently waterproof. In the liberal arts building, which has the most troublesome roof in the whole park, the leaks were numerous and many exhibits were damaged, but none seriously. In the different buildings many little booths have been opened during the past day or two, and before the visitor has walked a block in any one of them he has seen a display of souvenirs of all kinds and classes, which, were he to buy one from each stand, would require a mammoth moving van to carry them away. Numerous lunch counters, all maintaining high prices, have been opened and altogether the side show feature may now be said to be in full bloom. The warm sunny days induce the landscape gardeners to turn out in force and cover the immense beds outside of the horticultural building and on the wooded island with blooming plants. The California people are busily engaged in decking the big stretch of ground surrounding their state building with the flora fauna and fruit trees of the Pacific slope. Big orange and lemon trees, with the fruit hanging from the branches, already give the building a unique appearance and no sign is needed to tell visitors that California's exhibit is before them. The gentleman in charge of the exhibit of the Sioux City Engine works in machinery hall had not heard of the failure of his company until given the information to that effect this morning by a representative of the United Press. He said the failure was not unexpected, as the concern was one of the many involved in the recent failure of the Union Loan and Trust company, of Sioux City. He thought the suspension would be but temporary.

A LIBERAL VIEW

Taken of the Law Assessing Duties on Liquor.

WASHINGTON, May 12.—Assistant Secretary Hamlin has taken a more liberal view of the law than heretofore held, in assessing duties on casks of liquor, which have become depleted during the voyage of importation. A case in point was decided today. Several casks of wine were imported by a Chicago firm and when they arrived were empty. The evidence was to the effect that the vessel in which the wine was transported experienced severe weather. The law, however, makes no allowance for breakage or leakage, but as the duties must be assessed on the guagers returns, and in this case there was no liquids to guage. Assistant Secretary Hamlin has decided that the duty assessed at New York on the wines imported be remitted.

MORE FAILURES.

Dwiggins, Starbuck & Co. Still on the Break.

Their Branch Houses at Geneva and Dunkirk, Ind., and Williamsburg, Ohio, Closed Up.

PORTLAND, Ind., May 12.—About 1 o'clock this morning a courier from Dunkirk arrived here, and announced the failure of the Dunkirk bank which is owned and controlled by Dwiggins, Starbuck & Co., of Chicago. Attachments were at once filed, and a deputy sheriff left immediately to levy on all the available property. The bank has gone under for at least $75,000 and the amount may reach $100,000. The firm controlling this bank owns a number of others, and these are reported gone to the wall. The Geneva bank of their enterprise also has failed.

CINCINNATI, Ohio, May 12.—The private banking firm of Dwiggins, Starbuck & Co., of Williamsburg, Ohio, has failed. The assignment was made to D. W. Ashley, at Batavia, the county seat, shortly before last midnight, and was caused by the failure of the Columbia bank, of Chicago, of which Mr. Dwiggins was cashier. About $80,000 is due the Williamsburg bank from the Columbia, all of which it is thought will be lost.

The postmaster at Williamsburg ordered the arrest of Lawrence P. Good expert accountant, who had started for Cincinnati, this morning. Good was taken in custody on his arrival here. The order for arrest charges Good with embezzlement.

CHARLEVOIX, Mich., May 12.—W. P. Brown & Co., bankers, doing business under the name of the bank of Charlevoix, made an assignment to R. W. Kane last night. No statement has yet been made as to the cause of the suspension.

PAWPAW, Mich., May 12.—Great excitement prevails at Lawton. The managers of a local bank there did not open up the institution this morning, having left town last night. Citizens have some $18,000 deposited in the bank and are taking legal steps in the hope of realizing something.

WILMINGTON, Del., May 12.—The liabilities of R. R. Robinson & Co., the suspended banking firm, are placed at $325,000, and the assets at $204,000. S. J. Willey, supreme master of the exchequer of the Knights of Pythias, says that he has a large amount of the order's money in the bank, but that it is fully covered by collateral. He does not say what the amount is, but it is placed as high as $70,000. Willey is mayor of the city.

WILKESBARRE, Pa., May 12.—Assignee W. H. Stoddart, of the defunct banking house of F. V. Rockafellow, has filed his first partial account with the court. Four per cent. of the $500,000 reported by the depositors will be paid This is about the limit of the assets.

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., May 12.—Confidence in the ability of the suspended Capital National bank to resume business has been increased by reports of the probability of the resumption of the Chemical National of Chicago, which failed Monday. The Capital bank directors have issued a statement showing that resumption will be feasible. Bank Examiner Young, of Pittsburg, arrived this afternoon and took charge of the affairs.

A BRIBERY CASE.

Greed for Contracts Gets a Detroit Man Into Trouble.

He is Accused of Bribing an Alderman to Vote for a Lighting Contract.

DETROIT, Mich., May 12.—William H. Fitzgerald, manager of the Detroit Electric Light company, had his examination on the charge of bribery in the police court this morning. He is charged with having paid Alderman Protiva $200, with the promise of $800 more, to vote in favor of the company he represents in the public lighting contract. Alderman Protiva was put on the stand and said that Fitzgerald paid him the $200 and promised him more, and that Fitzgerald asked him to vote against the mayor's veto, saying he had secured the necessary number, and that he (Protiva) would make twenty-four

THE THIRD MAN.

William Mackessy's Trial Now in Progress.

LAFAYETTE, Ind., May 12.—The trial of William Mackessy, the third of the riot cases, was called yesterday and one hundred venire men were summoned for the jury. When court adjourned last night the baliff had called the forty-ninth name and twelve were temporarily in the box. Mackessy is one of the two men who came on the stage and assaulted Rudolph, Mackessy carrying a short club. Last night oral testimony was to have been taken to support impeached witnesses for Murphy's new trial plea, but when the defense called two of their important witnesses and found they were not present for examination they withdrew the objection heretofore made to the filing of certain affidavits by the state, which said affidavits pointedly contradict the affidavits made against the juror.

Yesterday a fine piece of linen was stolen from the counter of Mrs Reynold's drygoods store on Broadway. The culprit is known and had better return the goods

CYCLONE IN MICHIGAN.

It Sweeps Over the State, Doing Great Damage.

Horses and Cattle Killed, Buildings Destroyed and a Number of People Injured.

PINCKNEY, Mich., May 12.—A cyclone passed two miles east of this village at 2 o'clock this morning.

It first struck the barns and outbuildings of Louis Dryer, completely destroying them. His orchard was also destroyed

The cyclone next struck the premises of William Thompson and William Placeway, half a mile farther east, destroying all their farm buildings, orchards, windmills, etc. All the members of both families were injured, but it is said that none are seriously hurt.

Many horses and cattle were killed. One mile east from Placeway's farm the house and out buildings of John Fitche were struck and completely wrecked, not a post remaining standing. The family, consisting of seven persons, were all injured, but none seriously. So far the damage is estimated at $15,000.

LATER.

Later particulars from the pathway of the cyclone show that it started one mile southeast of here and traveled northeast one and one-half miles. Mr. Placeway's family escaped injury. A stone anchor to a windmill weighing one ton was carried three rods and debris from buildings was carried over a mile. Fitche's house was moved two rods from its foundation and completely upset. The family remained in the dismantled house until daylight, terror stricken. The width of the cyclone was about six rods. No one was seriously injured.

SOVEREIGN PRINCE DEAD

George Victor, of Waldeck, Bows to the Great Conqueror.

He Was a Sovereign only In Name, as He Had Surrendered All His Rights to Prussia.

BERLIN, May 12.—George Victor, the sovereign prince of Waldeck, died today at Marienbad, Bohemia, of pneumonia.

George Victor was born January 14, 1831, and succeeded to the throne of Waldeck at the death of his father, under the guardianship of his mother, May 15, 1845. He was married twice, his first wife having been the Princess Helena, daughter of the late Duke Wilhelm, of Nassau. She died in 1888.

One of the prince's daughters by this marriage was the Princess Helena, who became the wife of the late Prince Leopold, son of Queen Victoria, of Great Britain. Another daughter, the Princess Emma, became the wife of the late King William of the Netherlands, and at present Queen Regent of the Netherlands, ruling in behalf of her daughter, Queen Wilhelmina.

The first wife of Prince George Victor died in 1888, and the prince married in 1891 the Princess Louisa, daughter of the late Duke Frederick of Sleswig-Holstein-Sonderburgh Glucksburg, the second branch of the family, to the first branch of which the present German Empress belongs.

The late prince was only a sovereign in name, as after the war between Austria and Prussia he surrendered his chief sovereign rights to the king of Prussia in 1867, and Waldeck, while retaining a separate system of government, became subject to Prussia.

SERIOUS CHARGES

Preferred Against a Number of Capitalists.

They are Accused of Inciting a Revolution in Nicaragua for Personal Advantages.

WASHINGTON, May 12.—The statement made last night by Senor Don Horacio Guzeman, the Nicaraguan minister in Washington, that the Nicaragua revolution had been principally instigated by residents of New York city, who possessed large capital and were financially interested in affairs in Nicaragua," has excited wide attention both in diplomatic circles and elsewhere. The interest is enhanced by Dr. Guzeman's promise that he would make public the name of the persons he referred to at a later day. The charge is of so serious a character that, coming from a diplomat of Dr. Guzeman's standing, it will certainly not be allowed to rest. The Nicaraguan minister was one of the earliest callers at the state department this morning and had an interview with Secretary Gresham, the result of which has not yet been disclosed.

WORKING GIRLS.

They Will Organize a Union In This City.

Miss Belle Pierson and D. A. Kennedy Address a Large and Enthusiastic Meeting.

A large audience of the working girls of the city assembled last night in the old Morton hall to listen to the addresses delivered by Mr. D. A. Kennedy, of Indianapolis, and Miss Belle Pierson, of New Albany, who had came to the city for the purpose of organizing a working girl's union here, and the meeting was an interesting one to all.

D. A. Kennedy, of Indianapolis, was the first speaker introduced by the chairman of the meeting, C. L. Drummond. He spoke on the labor problem in its various phases and of the relation of labor and capital. They were joint partners, he said, but in the progress of events capital, the younger partner of the firm, secured the unequal advantage. It lives in luxury and allows to labor only a sufficient pittance to eke out a living.

He devoted some time to a discussion of the eight-hour work day. Long hours of work, he said, are sapping from the laboring classes of this country their best energies and making them old men and women in physical condition long before their time. Men are in their prime between the ages of thirty and forty and during that time can do a wonderful amount of work. They can stand it to work on a pressure and at a rapid gait, but there comes a time when long hours and overwork breaks down their physical condition and heartless, avaricious employers find reasons for discharging them to fill their places with younger and more vigorous men. Shorter hours will right this wrong and enable men to maintain their vigor long after what is called the prime of life.

Labor, he said, is entitled to its fair share of the results which it brings about, and should receive a just compensation for what it produces. Capital should not have all the profits. After getting a fair return for its money invested, it should give to labor a remuneration that would enable it to enjoy some of the luxuries of life. They are entitled to them just as much as capital is. Something more than a bare living should be earned by the laboring masses of this country, and if they do not get it the fault lies with labor in not enforcing a demand which right, justice, humanity and nature should entitle them to receive.

Organization, he said in closing, was the one means which would bring this better state of things about. Labor should not go around begging for their rights. They should place themselves in a position where they could demand it. This is the object and purpose of unions. They had been productive of good results, and would continue to be as long as the workingmen of this country stood shoulder to shoulder, true to their colors, in demanding their rights. For this reason he would urge the working girls of the city to form a union. It would be beneficial to them. Women are not earning today what they should. Unionism among them would bring about a new era. It would give them better pay and shorter hours and result in benefiting their condition in every way.

Miss Belle Pierson, a young lady who is a type setter on the New Albany Ledger, and who is now devoting her time to the organization of working girls' unions, was next introduced and spoke of some of the features of the wage question as it affected the working girls of the country. She had delivered the principal address of the meeting on Wednesday evening and last night after speaking briefly on labor topics and the benefits to be derived from organization, closed with an appeal to the working girls of this city to form a union.

She is a pleasant, earnest, forcible speaker and her address was interesting to the large audience present, speaking as she did without manuscript or memorandum. Miss Pierson is a young lady of charming manners and pleasant address and won many friends during her stay in the city. She is a delegate from New Albany to the International Typographical union at Chicago and is heart and soul in the work in which she is now engaged.

Before the close of the meeting last night a number of the working girls employed in the different factories expressed their intention of forming a union in this city, and signed a paper calling for a meeting to be held at the Knights of Labor hall next Monday evening, when a temporary organization will be formed. There are several hundred working girls in this city who are eligible to membership, and if the movement inaugurated is successfully carried out the union will be a large and important one.

Miss Pierson, the state organizer, was seen this morning in the parlors of the Randall hotel by THE SENTINEL, and spoke in high terms of praise of the treatment that had been accorded her in this city.

"Fort Wayne," she said, "has more working girls than any other city in the state outside of Indianapolis, and the forming of a union here would be of great advantage to them. I think the movement to do so will be successful and I know that it will benefit their condition. I shall probably return here in the near future and devote an entire week to working up an interest in the union. I shall try to get the working girls in all the factories and establishments to join it."

Speaking of the work throughout the state, she said, it was progressing finely and unions were being formed in every city. The state convention of working girls' unions, she said, would be held at South Bend in July and by that time she expected Indiana would be pretty well organized, and she hoped that Fort Wayne would be one of the best represented cities there

Miss Pierson has been engaged in the work of organizing unions throughout the state and has been very successful. She left this afternoon for her home at New Albany.

QUEALY WILL FIGHT.

He is Willing and Anxious to Meet McArthur.

The Huntington Boy Will Now Have to "Put Up or Shut Up"—Sport Promised.

It will be remembered that a few weeks ago THE SENTINEL published the account of a Huntington man named McArthur, who was anxious to meet Tim Quealy, the pugilist, and who sent his backer to this city to perfect arrangements for a contest. Quealy had gone to Grand Rapids a day or so previous and no arrangements were made. If McArthur wishes a contest he can readily be accommodated, as the following letter from Quealy will show:

GRAND RAPIDS, Mich., May 11, '93.
Sporting Editor EVENING SENTINEL.

DEAR SIR:—I saw a challenge in your paper a short time ago from a man by the name of McArthur, who wants to fight me for from one hundred to five hundred dollars a side. Now please state for me that I will accommodate him on short notice if he puts up a forfeit in any responsible business man's hands in Fort Wayne. I will come on at once and cover the same and sign articles of agreement.

I am in the business for the money there is in it, not for the love of fighting, and don't make any bluffs. I mean business, and if this man from Huntington means the same, he will have no trouble in making a match with me. Hoping you will give this article space in your valuable paper.

I remain, yours truly,
TIM A. QUEALY,
Middle Weight Champion of Michigan.

From sporting headquarters in this city it is learned that McArthur's backer will come to Fort Wayne any day and arrange for a match. Another contest is highly probable. It will occur in the Princess rink.

LABOR TROUBLES.

The Texas Central Has a Strike on Its Hands.

Union Men Discharged and Others Put in Their Places, But the Scheme Fails.

WACO, Tex., May 12.—For a month employes of the Texas Central railroad in the operating department have been restless. On two occasions committees representing the dissatisfied men have visited Waco for conference, and in each case a compromise has been partially effected. Last week several conductors and brakemen were discharged and yesterday an attempt to supply their places with new men met with resistance so that freight business on the road was practically suspended. Application for an injunction restraining the discharged employes from interference was made to Judge Hall and last night the sheriff of Bosque county left for Walnut, at which place the disturbance is most acute.

SAM MORRIS DEAD.

He Expires This Noon at the St. Joe Hospital.

Brief Sketch of His Romantic Career—No Arrangements Yet Made for the Funeral.

Sammy Morris, the young African missionary, is dead. This announcement will cause many a heart to ache for in the few short months which the colored boy has resided in Fort Wayne hundreds have become interested in his career.

He died a few moments after 12 o'clock at the St. Joe hospital. Sammy was sitting at the east window looking out upon the green lawns and blossoming trees when the angel of death touched him and his spirit passed into the great beyond.

The cause of his death was stomach trouble and he had just eaten a hearty dinner when he expired without a moment's warning. Dr. Stemen, who lives just across the street, was sent for in haste, but he arrived too late for the poor lad was beyond the aid of any physician.

The story of Samuel Morris' life reads like a romance. A few weeks ago, when he was first taken ill, THE SENTINEL published the story complete, expressing at the same time the universal wish of the community that he might be spared for the cause in which he had consecrated his life. But, alas, his career is ended and the promises of his earthly life have withered before the more resplendant rays of a spiritual dawn.

Samuel Morris was born about twenty years ago in the wilds of heathen Africa, somewhere between the eastern border of the free state of Liberia and the Kong mountains. His father was the chief of a small tribe of warlike natives and the lad's early life was a stormy one. He was twice stolen from home and carried into another part of the country. He was first taken from home when but three years of age and carried off by a slaver. He managed to escape from his master when eleven years old and succeeded in reaching his old home. He was again carried off and taken to eastern Liberia, when he again escaped and made his way to the coast. Here he was buffeted about and finally fell under the notice of one of Bishop Taylor's missionaries. He was converted to Christianity and joined the Methodist church. Although but a mere boy, he conceived the idea of coming to the United States to study for the ministry that he might return to the Dark Continent and teach his heathen brethren. With this object in view he succeeded in inducing the captain of a steamship to allow him to work his passage to New York, arriving in that city in September, 1891. He at once went to the home of Rev. Stephen A. Merritt, the noted philanthropist, who arranged with Dr. C. B. Stemen, then head of the Taylor university, of this city, to take charge of the lad and educate him. Sammy came on to Fort Wayne, reaching here in October, the same year. Since then he has been a student in the university. His expenses have been altogether borne by donations from various religious societies in this and neighboring states.

Some two months ago his health began to fail him and he was removed to the St. Joe hospital. The young African was an ardent and true Christian. His whole mind seemed bent only upon the work he felt convinced the Master had laid out for him. His ambition knew no bounds. He had, for one of his race, a good mind, but in his education his teachers had to combat the effects of centuries of heathenism. The boy's progress was, however, satisfactory.

But now his studies are over, and although his life was brief, his example will always live with those who knew him. His skin was black, but his heart was spotless. In the story of his life the individual is as clay, but the cause which he espoused is richer than gold.

No arrangements have been made for the funeral.

THE Fort Wayne Daily Press has donned a handsome new dress.

THE youthful emperor of Germany, the "war lord," as he delights to call himself, has been making history pretty fast since he ascended the throne.

GENERAL CLARKSON whoops it up to his high protection friends in the same old manner, just as though there had not been an avalanche last fall. He denies that there will be any more "bloody shirt" waving, but waves it just the same.

CHOLERA is a dirt disease. Cleanliness robs it of its terrors. The duty of the hour is not only to secure perfectly clean streets and alleys, but for each householder to prescribe and enforce the most scrupulous cleanliness upon his own premises. If this is done we need have no fear that cholera, even should it appear, will produce serious harm.

The Emperor's Policy.

The German emperor's remarkable speech to his officers is generally interpreted as a hot headed defiance of the constitutional system, a declaration that he is determined to have the army that he wants whether the Reichstag will vote for it or not. While this is the most obvious construction of the speech, it quite probably had a more politic purpose.

This is indicated by some further opinions of the emperor communicated to an official correspondent, in which stress is laid upon the impossibility of governing with a parliament split up into so many factions that a stable majority can at no time be counted on. "Few things would please the emperor better," says this inspired correspondent, "than a consolidation of the parliamentary factions into two or three large parties, with whom he would be able to reckon in determining his policy. Then he would be happy to govern in harmony with the parliamentary majority."

Whether the army bill was wisely chosen for the purpose may be questioned, but we have here the suggestion of a definite policy of forcing one paramount issue upon the country and thus compelling a distinct division of parties, for and against, in the place of the numerous shifting groups and temporary combinations that for years have halted all systematic legislative progress in Germany. If this is the emperor's purpose, his present assertive attitude may be more statesmanlike than at first appears.

Of course, the majority that he desires is one in harmony with himself, and this he ought to have. For if the Germans believe in an emperor, they should allow him imperial powers. But neither an emperor, a king nor a president can govern with a quarrelsome, disorderly and inefficient legislature, such as the late reichstag was.

"The Battle Summer."

The country has just entered upon an anniversary period of special interest to old soldiers. May 5 and 6, 1864, occurred the battles of the Wilderness. From May 8 to 12 was the bloody struggle at Spottsylvania, the principal fighting being on the 10th and 12th. Engagements in the same connection took place up to the 21st. Other battles of the month were May 5 to 31, Atlanta campaign (this lasted, with numerous battles, until September 1); May 6, 7, Walthall, Chester Station, Va.; 12-16, Drury's Bluff, Va.; 18-20, Ware Bottom church, Va.; 21-31, Bermuda Hundred, Va.; 9-10, Cloyd's Mountain, W. Va.; 11, Newmarket, Va.; 15, Bayou Glace, La.; 22-27, North Anna, Va.; 28-31, Totopotomy, Va.; 30-31, Sheridan's cavalry raid, Va. June followed with another bloody list, including Cold Harbor, Va., from the 1st to the 4th, and the Petersburg assault, 20th to 30th. There were innumerable other encounters in Virginia and elsewhere, with fatalities ranging from ten to far up among the hundreds.

July and August added to the score of "the battle summer," and in fact the carnage continued throughout the year. Grant was thundering at Lee's front in Virginia, with Sheridan at the head of the cavalry pounding the enemy at every opportunity. Sherman was piercing the vitals of the confederacy. Thomas was preparing for the crushing blow to Hood which he finally delivered at Nashville. In short, the union forces, like a mighty anaconda drawing its coils about its prey, were steadily and surely putting an end to the rebellion, though the final collapse only came at Appomattox April 9, 1865. The greatest union losses in that period of almost unbroken fighting were as follows:

	Killed	Wounded, including mortally wounded
Atlanta campaign (spring to September)	4,423	22,822
Wilderness	2,246	12,037
Spottsylvania	2,725	13,416
Drury's Bluff	[illegible]	2,380
Cold Harbor	1,844	9,077
Petersburg assault	1,688	8,513
Petersburg mine	504	1,881
Total	13,829	70,126
Total killed and wounded		83,955

The losses in the minor engagements swell the aggregate to far greater figures. The total killed and wounded in the war cannot be determined with exactness, but the most reliable estimate puts the number at 385,245. Taking that calculation, it is easy to see how large a proportion of the casualties occurred in that bloody "battle summer."

In 1894 just thirty years will have elapsed since this period of carnage. No doubt there will be many memorable observances and reunions to mark the anniversary season.

Sound Philosophy.

At a recent county fair in New England there was, according to the reports in the local newspapers, a continual crowd around one agricultural exhibit, which excited a great deal of admiration, and was the occasion of many remarks. The exhibit was marked, "Raised on an Abandoned Farm." The articles shown were grown by a man who had formerly followed another occupation, upon a farm in a rough hill town, which its owner had found an undesirable piece of property and had practically deserted. The exhibit included twenty-two varieties of potatoes, several varieties of wheat, oats, barley, rye and beans, onions, pumpkins, squashes, melons, beets, carrots and turnips. "It was such a display," the local paper says, "as might be made by a carefully attended farm, with all the advantages of cultivation." The people kept the proprietor of the "abandoned farm" busy explaining how he produced such wonderful results. His reply was that he took delight in farming, and did the best he could. "Oh yes," said one bystander, somewhat contemptuously, "he's farming for the love of it." "And I imagine," said another bystander, "that if the farmer who had the place before this man took it had farmed a little more for the love of it, he wouldn't have had any occasion to go off and leave it." There was sound philosophy in this remark. Many an "abandoned farm," if its true history were known, would be found to be deserted simply because the owner did not enter with zest upon the work needed to make it profitable. He did not know how, and was too indolent to learn; or he knew, and was too indifferent to adopt the means necessary to insure success. An enthusiast might make a rocky pasture yield him a living, while a lazy man might starve upon the richest soil.

A MEDICAL practitioner of long experience says: "I believe that a good many people who are supposed to die of hydrophobia scare themselves to death. They are bitten by a dog—perfectly harmless dog, usually—and they brood over it and worry about it until they develop all the symptoms of hydrophobia. I should treat every case of alleged poisoning by rabies by putting the patient under chloroform and watching him during the stupor. If he was coming out of it and the convulsions continued then the case would be genuine, but if in that interval the patient had forgotten what ailed him I should laugh him out of it. Frights are the commonest of injuries. Even a rabid dog may bite a man without producing any ill effects."

THE discussion is still hot over the question whether the highest peak in the State of Washington should be called Mount Tacoma or Mount Rainier. The latter is the name used in the standard atlases and on the maps of the United States geological survey. But the citizens of Tacoma maintain that, while Rainier may be the historic name, having been given to the peak by Vancouver in 1792, Tacoma is the prehistoric name, having been the Indian name for it from time immemorial. For this reason, and because Tacoma is much more euphonious, they urge that it be officially adopted as the name of the proposed park which is to include the mountain.

ROBERT GRAVES for many years the best known caterer at Wilmington, Del., and the officially recognized leader of colored society in that place, died the other day with the reputation of having amassed the largest fortune of any colored man in Delaware. Four professed heirs have turned up demanding the estate, and have hired three lawyers to press their claims. As yet, however, little or nothing of the decedent's estate has been found.

LILLIE'S LOVE.

"My patience, how that girl does try me! Now just look at her. And I sent her out to pick peas for dinner more than a quarter of an hour ago!"

It was a summer morning. David Elwyn had come to the house for a cool drink from the well where the horses rested. His mother, in a calico dress and gingham sun bonnet, was hurrying about from kitchen to cellar and from cellar to a well full of the cares of her busy work.

Across the yard, in one group of trees in all that great expanse of cornfield stood gaily fluttering their bright leaves in the wind, while from a strong lower branch swung "that girl." Fonto, the big brown dog, frisking gaily about her, thinking it some new, delightful game.

David forgot that he was expected to look reprovingly at the spectacle. He removed his straw hat, wiped the moisture from his face, while a fond expression came into his earnest gray eyes.

"It's no use talking, David; she'll have to go out to work. I can't get anything out of her, but I'll bet a sixpence Jonas Quinn's wife can. When you and me both have to toil all day long to make a living, and that mortgage coming due, we can't keep Lillie in idleness. She's well and strong, and she'll have to learn to take her share of the burdens of life."

"Oh, mother! Send Arthur Forrest's daughter to be Mrs. Quinn's drudge and slave? I'll work harder—do more of yours; or, if you once firmly and kindly make Lillie understand you are doing too much for your strength, I'm sure she will try to help you more."

"Oh, I don't say but she's willing enough! She forgets, and she's so full of fun and play she can't just work, someway. See here, Lillie! I am waiting for those peas for dinner."

The pink form gave a spring and landed on the ground.

There was a merry laugh, then a sweet voice exclaimed, "Oh, auntie, I forgot! The world is so lovely today I want to fly away up to the sky. The good old trees and the rushing winds did their best, but I couldn't get clear away. I'll have those peas picked in two seconds!"

The pea-vines suffered, but Lillie had handfuls of the bursting pods in her basket in a twinkling.

Seventeen years before, David and his friend, Arthur Forrest, who was several years older than himself had come to Canada "to seek their fortunes." David's father, failing in business, failed to find anything in life to live for, so ceased doing so.

Arthur had angered his guardian and uncle by marrying the girl he loved with her beauty and poverty, instead of one he disliked with her plain face and handsome income. So the two boys, alone but for wife and mother, struck out bravely to dig success from the soil.

Arthur, unused to hardships, found the struggle too great for him. The soil yielded him only a quiet resting place. His young wife pined away, and very soon followed, leaving a beautiful baby girl, helpless and poor, in the strange, new country.

But this sort of life was not to go on forever. One evening David received an important letter which changed it all. It seems that the obdurate uncle had died, and though he had never before recognized Lillie's existence, he had at the last moment made a will in her favor, ignoring, with a sort of grim humor, the host of fawning and expectant friends that surrounded him. And he had hoarded more money than anyone imagined, so Lillie, after all, was very rich. Her guardian, until she became of age, was a wealthy and highly respectable old lawyer in Quebec. David and Mrs. Elwyn were to be paid for their care of her, and then her connection with them was to end.

"I won't go! I won't have their old money if I can't do as I like!"

"But you must, there is no other way."

"If I go I can do what I please with my money, I suppose?"

"With your guardian's consent."

"He must consent! You and auntie shall not work hard any more. If you want to stay here you must hire everything done and take your ease. All I have is yours. Where is the money, anyway? I want to put it all in your own rough, good old hands, Davie."

"I am afraid that you can do less as you like than ever you could before, Lillie. You must leave us, and go among your father's friends; you must go to school, for, though I've taught you nearly all I know, you are not accomplished, as a lady in your position should be. And then you must take your place in society. Ah, my prairie blossom, I fear we have lost you forever!"

"No, no; just wait, and you'll see. And tell that tiresome old guardian to give you all the money you want to use, will you?"

David evaded her. Whether they would have it so or not, Lillie had to go. He could not take payment for that which sweetened all his toilsome life, and, after the sad parting, he and his mother took up the same old struggle with a new shadow and a new loneliness falling about them.

Two years slowly dragged themselves away. Not a letter had come to them from Lillie, not a word of affection or remembrance.

Mrs. Elwyn's tireless energy was failing her. All their work seemed so unrequited. Crops failed, but interest-bearing notes of hand never did. David fell ill in the rush of harvest. Autumn was approaching and there would not be enough in the barn and the bins to keep the creatures and the stock over winter. The mortgage was likely to be foreclosed at any time. Lack and homelessness seemed staring them in the face, instead of the comfort and ease they had toiled and hoped for.

David, still weak, was creeping about among the cattle one evening, attending to their wants; the mother sat discontentedly on the porch, the chickens and calves still uncared for.

She felt as if she could do no more—it was of no use. She was growing old, and was no better off than when she first began to toil so hard. And "that girl" had forgotten them in her prosperity, just as she anticipated she would. Everything was as discouraging as it could possibly be.

At that very moment the sky brightened. A carriage and horses came flying along the road and stopped at their gate. A beautiful creature with shining curls and radiant eyes sprang from it, and came so swiftly, so softly, to her side, it was like the gliding of an angel.

"You dear old auntie! You are alive and well after all! Why—why haven't you written to me all this time?"

"Lillie, it's never you!" the tired woman was weeping. "You forgot us, we never heard a word from you."

"I wrote often at first, but my letters at school had always to be given to the principal—I do not believe one was ever posted. My guardian is a pompous, hard hearted man, who wanted me to forget my old home and friends, and he wanted me to marry his empty-headed son. Bah! The minute I became of age I demanded that my property should be placed in my own hands. I defied them all, and came back to you. I don't like the city—it is only a moving prison. I don't like society—it is full of smiling prisoners, all deceiving each other. I like the glorious prairies, and you and Davie. Where is Davie, auntie?"

He would soon be here, the softened woman said, and went on to tell their sorrowful story, while the beautiful little lady sprinkled tears that lay like diamonds on her thin gray hair.

David came slowly around the house, wondering if it was possible he had heard voices. What vision was this? Something too bright, too precious, for him to touch. And yet it came close to his side, clasped his hard hand between two soft, snowy flakes; it resolved itself into a familiar form, clad as he had never seen it, and a well known face with lustrous eyes gleaming through tears to look fondly into his own. One of his many dreams had come true.

Well, she would not leave them. She would live nowhere else, and she would invest her money in farm mortgages, valuable stock, improved machinery and substantial buildings. She turned a deaf ear to entreaties and commands from wealthy admirers and exasperated relatives; she declared she would never go back, and finally they all gave it up, voted the little heiress outre and let her alone.

David superintended the elaborate farming, and improved in his health and in his looks, as cessation from excessive labor improves every one. He ought to have been happy, but he was not. How could he, when he owed everything to this beautiful little woman he worshipped, but who was so far, far above him? She would marry some time, and leave them, and just now she was making that future hard to contemplate. She seemed to cling to him; she came to him for advice, confidence, friendship; all that was great and good in David's nature answered to her faith in him. But it was only as an elder brother, he assured himself a hundred times a day; he never suspected he was a man for a woman to love, with a character more lovable than idleness and luxury could have made it. He only mourned in secret over the great distance between them, and at last resolved he could bear it no longer.

"Lillie," he said, at last, "buy my farm outright. Make some arrangement by which mother can have a home here, and I will go away. I am thinking of California, and—and—well, I can't stay here any longer."

Lillie lifted her startled eyes to his face and dropped them again, for she read something there.

"You are going away? Oh, David, did I think you would treat me so?"

"Treat you so? My dear—Lillie, it is for your sake! I cannot always refrain from telling you what is in my heart, and then you will hate me."

"And you mean to desert me? You have been so attentive, so kind, so good, that you have led me to believe that you really had serious intentions." There was a sob in her voice, but oh, what a mischievous light in her shaded eyes! "It isn't right for a big, strong man to win the heart of a poor little thing like me and then go away and leave her!"

"Lillie, Lillie, you will drive me wild if you are only jesting! Dare I love you? Will you be my wife?"

"Why, Davie, I've always loved you. Why else have I come back? Why else have I been determined to stay? So, now, if I'm never your wife, I'll be auntie's old maid companion, and we'll live on the farm till we die. Are you going away?"

"No; I will never be parted from you again, my little love!"—N. Y. Journal.

As good as new—that's the condition of liver, stomach and bowels, when Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets have done their work. It's a work that isn't finished when you've stopped taking them, either. It's lasting. They cure, as well as relieve. And it's all done so mildly and gently! There's none of the violence that went with the old-time pill. One tiny, sugar-coated Pellet's a gentle laxative—three to four act as a cathartic. Sick Headache, Constipation, Indigestion, Bilious Attacks and derangements of the stomach and bowels, are prevented, relieved and cured. As a liver pill, they're unequaled. They're purely vegetable, perfectly harmless—the smallest, cheapest, and easiest to take.

They're the cheapest pill you can buy, because they're guaranteed to give satisfaction, or your money is returned.

You only pay for the good you get. Can you ask more?

That's the peculiar plan all Dr. Pierce's medicines are sold on.

Mothers, Be sure and use "Mrs Winslow's Soothing Syrup" for your children while cutting teeth. It is the best remedy of all. May8eod&wly

Alfred, rapturously—Now, darling, please name the happy day.

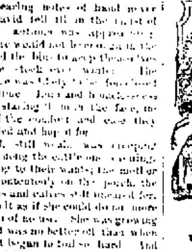
Money in the Church Lock.

When the lock was taken off the door of the old Episcopal church at Rome, Ga., which has just been pulled down, it was found to contain a silver dime made in 1839. It is supposed the dime has been in the lock for many years, and a key was once broken in the lock on account of the dime closing its passage.

Are You Thinking

Of what you ought to take with you when you go to the world's fair? Your outfit will not be complete without a bottle of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhœa Remedy. The change of water and diet, fatigue, and irregular habits, during your trip are almost certain to produce diarrhœa and a dose or two of this remedy may save you serious sickness and perhaps much expense. Procure it before leaving home 25 and 50 cent bottles for sale by druggists.



THE OLD CAMP FIRE.

Lexington, September 20, 1861.

WAS IT A DISASTROUS ROUT?

They lost the battle—but they fought it well
Two days and more the unequal fight was waged
Twice sank the sun, and still the carnage raged
Hotter and hotter as each foeman fell
But deadlier than the bullets of the foe
Were the fierce tortures of an unquenched thirst.
Strong men lay panting in the lurid glow
When the stern fact upon their senses burst,
For forty-nine long hours No water! that!
What storied heroes ever were so brave?
And still unconquered while no power could save
They poured their life blood on the reeking sod.
Aught of that ghastly field must be re-won
And this the watch cry—Mulligan and Lexington.

The First and Last Guns.

The first gun fired was at Fort Sumter and the last was fired at Macon. Some interesting stories have been published lately about the firing of the last gun, and the statement has been published that it has been done at Columbus, Ga. The facts were ascertained recently from Mr. D. E. King, the commercial agent of the Missouri Pacific Railroad, at Albany, Ga. Mr. King said:

"I was in the Federal Army, and belonged to the First Ohio Cavalry, in Gen. Wilson's command. We reached Columbus, Ga., on April 17, 1865, and stayed there three days, after which we marched to Macon.

"While on the march we were fired on frequently by scouts or bushwhackers, and the advance guard, after some little reconnoitering, would return the shots and advance. I was an orderly under Gen. Alexander, who had charge of the advance forces, and when we were within seven or eight miles of Macon we were met by a party of gentlemen, citizens from Macon, who asked us not to enter the city, as an armistice had been declared.

"I went myself to Gen. Wilson and notified him of what the delegation of citizens said; he went forward and had a talk with them. I was there and overheard everything that was said. Gen. Wilson said that he had not been officially notified of the armistice, and that he intended to establish his headquarters in Macon that night.

"He told the citizens that he would not allow his soldiers to disturb anything or anybody, but that his entrance to the city would be peaceable. He was informed that the Confederates had forces stationed across the river from Macon and beyond the railroad where he would enter.

"We proceeded to the city, and after entering it we would see the Confederate camp to our right. While marching through the the streets, three shots directed at our column came from the Confederates without effect, and we proceeded on the march. This was the last gun fired. I do not remember the date we entered Macon, but it was between the 20th and 30th of April, 1865."—Atlanta Constitution.

Superior Sharpshooting by Indian Troops.

Colonel Daniel W. Benham's report of small arms practice in the Department of the Platte for the target year 1892 has been submitted.

The interest in Colonel Benham's report must center in that portion showing the degree of efficiency acquired by the Indian companies. Since Indian troops and companies are not included in the regimental figure of merit, they are not classified in the report with other troops. By appended figures it may be plainly seen, however, that they are abundantly able to cope with the pale-face soldiers, and that the figures of merit of the department would have been decidedly improved by their classification.

Company I, Eighth Infantry, under the instruction of Capt. P. H. Ray, has six sharpshooters and sixteen marksmen qualified. The company has also seven first-class men, making a total of twenty-nine men classified out of a company of fifty-five men, who made 23.71 per cent at company skirmish firing, 11.06 per cent at company volley firing, a collective figure of merit of 2[illegible], and individual figure of merit of 111.03, and a general figure of merit of 72.95. The twenty-five men not classified made fairly good scores up to and including 600 yards. That the achievements of Capt. Ray's company may be compared with the records of other organizations in the department—there are nine organizations without a single sharpshooter and thirty-six that have less than his company. In the general figure of merit, 72.95, this company leads more than half the other organizations. The other Indian organizations, Companies I, Second, Seventh, and Twenty-first, and Troop L, Sixth cavalry, did not make the necessary scores to advance them beyond 600 yards, and they therefore confined their practice to short and mid ranges.

It must be remembered that this is a new experience of the red men with the Springfield rifle and that he is totally ignorant of the adjustment of the sights.—Omaha Morning World-Herald.

Pertinent Question.

Old Aunt Dinah was a colored woman who had a remarkably strong voice, and would sing and cry "glory" with such vigor as to be heard above all the rest of the congregation, but she was of an unpleasantly "saving" disposition.

It was the custom at the missionary meetings of the church she attended to take up a collection during the singing of the hymn, "Fly Abroad, Thou Mighty Gospel!" In the midst of which Aunt Dinah always threw back her head, closed her eyes and sang away at the top of her lungs till the plate had passed her by.

The collector, who was a man of plain speech, observed this habit of the old woman's, and one evening when he came to her seat he stopped short, and, surveying her rapt countenance, said bluntly:

"Look a-heah, yo' Aunt Dinah! What's de good ob yo' a-singin' an' a-singin', 'Fly Abroad, Thou Mighty Gospel,' ef yo' doan' gib nuffin to make her fly?"

Memories.

Among the numberless stories told of Gen. Butler since his death is this, extracted from the Boston Globe. The narrator had an important law case on and believed that "Ben Butler" was the man to win it. Butler was in Washington, so he went to the capital, and after two days succeeded in obtaining an interview with the General, who declared that he was overwhelmed with work. He would not take the case for a thousand dollars a day.

"General," I said, as he turned abruptly to his work, "I was born in the same town with you."

He grunted, but wasn't otherwise affected, so far as I could see.

"Do you remember little Miss ——? And the boy who used to send notes to her, and the boy who used to take them? I'm the boy who took the notes."

"And I am the boy that sent them," said the General.

He held out his hand.

"I guess I'll take your case after all," he said, and he did and won it.

They Drank to Lord Howe.

At one time the officers under Lord Howe refused to drink his health at their mess, for, though a splendid admiral, he was not popular in the navy on account of a certain shyness and want of tact with those about him.

The chaplain, who was a protege of his lordship, was mortified at this, and determined that the officers should drink to Lord Howe.

When called upon for a toast one day he said, "Well, gentlemen, I can think of nothing better at this moment than to ask you to drink the first two words of the third Psalm; for a scriptural toast for once may be taken from one of my cloth."

The toast was drunk. Not one of the officers intimated by word or look that he was ignorant of the words alluded to. On referring to the Bible it was found that the third Psalm begins, "Lord, how are they increased!"

After the glorious first of June the above was the favorite toast throughout the navy, and the chaplain triumphed more widely than he anticipated.

"Bum."

The members of the National Military Home, at Marion, Ind., had a pet dog of the Newfoundland species, about 2 years old, who came into the Home grounds, and, by official consent, was fully admitted to membership. The dog soon became a universal favorite. He seemed to have unbounded affection for the "old vets," but had a decided contempt for civilians, barking at them when they came on the Home grounds. "Bum" recently made a visit down into South Marion and returned poisoned, whether the effects of a "jag" or other cooler frivolity was undetermined at the inquest. Dying, he was buried on the Home grounds with the honors of war, and the Home poet immortalized his memory in verse as follows:

"Bum is Dead"
And from barrack to barrack the message sped;
Nor stayed it then, but with strident sound
It compassed the camp's remotest bound
With the burden of grief it bore

"Bum is Dead"
And with him much of our life is fled—
Long will we miss from our tottering ranks
His welcome form and his playful pranks
And his growl of mimic rage.

"Bum is Dead"
The many repeat, while, with drooping head,
They censure the wanton hand that felled
Our kindly friend, whose grace impelled
Affection's God to mourn

"Bum is Dead"
And I may not say whether tears were shed,
But many an eye through a liquid light
Shone as the surface of crystal bright
Shines through the sun-lit dew.

He lavished affection with prodigal hand,
Yet the line he instinctively drew
'Tween the motley garb of the outside world
And our uniform dress of blue.

But we know there was no hate in the bark
That greeted the strangers' face,
So they, too, may join in our fervent farewell,
And our "requiescat in pace."

Terrible Ammunition.

A strange war story comes from New Zealand. Some years ago Sir John Gorst lived in Waikoto, and edited the Maori newspaper, Te Hakioi. The paper was printed and published near the scene of some of the hottest fighting of the war then raging.

During the struggle the Maoris ran short of ammunition, and having no ball for their fourteen-pound guns, they loaded them with shot weights confiscated from neighboring shopkeepers. This source of supply was soon exhausted.

Then a raid was made on the Hakioi office, and their guns were charged with type and stereo blocks. This new ammunition, so the story goes, proved very effective.

One of the white invaders was injured by a patent medicine advertisement, another was invalided by a "Church bazaar announcement," a third lost a leg through a solid leader on the Land Bill, and Sir John, who had taken refuge with the British troops, had a narrow escape of being hit with one of his own poems.

Another Case.

Her Father—My dear, I would rather have you marry a poor American than a rich Englishman.

The Belle (convincingly)—Yes, papa dear, but this is an entirely different case. I want to marry a poor Englishman. Why, Lord Algernon is head over heels in debt.—New York Herald.

Stranger—Is the queen in?

Sentinel (at Buckingham palace)—Wot d'yu want, me good feller?

Stranger—Got a big thing here—want to show it to her. Set her down, boys. "Winterbottom's patent throne and——"—Puck.

Value of Collection.

Little Boy—Papa, I wish you'd save all the postage stamps that come on your letters.

Papa—What for?

"I'm making a collection of them."

"Humph! What earthly use will a collection of canceled stamps be?"

"I—I don't know, but I guess it'll be of about as much use as the collection of cracked teapots that mamma is making."

Woman's Danger.

No man can ever know the devoted martyrdom of many women.

Unselfishly a woman works and suffers that home and loved ones may be happy.

When it seems as though her back would break, when she grows irregular, faint, irritable, loses all interest in society, gets the "blues," is crushed with that indescribable feeling of "bearing-down," she "drags along," day after day, suffering agonies that would appal a man.

The cause of all her trouble is some derangement of the uterus or womb, perhaps the development of a tumor, or cancerous humor, — anyway, give it instant attention.

JOHN J. LAMB,

Of the Machinists' Union, Charged With Fraud.

Accidents, Incidents and Personal Mention of the People About the Railway Centers.

The startling news comes from Indianapolis that John J. Lamb, the retiring treasurer of the International Association of Machinists, is charged by his fellow-members with embezzling $4,500 belonging to the order. He has been missing since Tuesday night. Wednesday evening, after the executive board of the association had became fully convinced that he had decamped with the money, a warrant was issued for his arrest, at the instance of Douglass Wilson, chairman of the executive committee, and was signed by two other members of the committee. During the afternoon Mr. Wilson, with other members of the committee, called on the superintendent of police of Indianapolis and notified him that Lamb could not be found, and that the association's money on deposit in the Meridian National bank had been checked out by the missing treasurer. The superintendent was asked to render assistance in the finding and arrest of the defaulting officer. The superintendent stated to the members of the committee that he could not proceed unless an affidavit was made, charging Mr. Lamb with embezzlement. Mr. Wilson and his colleagues then went before Police Judge Buskirk and made affidavit, charging Mr. Lamb with the embezzlement of $4,500. At 5 o'clock a warrant for Lamb's arrest was issued, telegrams sent to eighteen different cities making inquiries about the missing officer, but Mr. Lamb had not been seen in any of the cities.

It was not until W. L. Dawley, of Richmond, Va., the new treasurer, was installed in office that the discovery was made that the association's money was missing. Lamb could not be found when the hour arrived for him to turn over his accounts to his successor. Chairman Wilson, of the executive committee, went to the Meridian National bank, where the association's money was on deposit, and there learned that on Tuesday Lamb had drawn from the bank $4,500—money that had been placed on deposit to meet the expenses of the convention of the international association. The first thought of the members of the executive committee was that Lamb had transferred the money to another bank, but upon investigation it was found that this had not been done. There was a hurried meeting of the executive committee, and without much debate the decision to call for the arrest of the defaulter was reached.

Chairman Wilson, of the executive committee, says that the association will not lose anything by the embezzlement. Lamb's bond, he says, is for $10,000. A surety company guarantees one-half the bond and the other half is guaranteed by residents of Bloomington, Ill.

SIXTY-NINE MILES IN SIXTY-EIGHT MINUTES.

The Columbian engine, No. 999, of the New York Central, drew the Empire State express from Syracuse to Buffalo Tuesday. East of Syracuse the train had lost twenty-five minutes on account of a foaming boiler, and it left Syracuse twenty-three minutes late, leaving Rochester at 4:15, or twenty eight minutes late. Engineer Hogan set out to make up part of this between Rochester and Buffalo, and while it had not been intended to make any effort at special time, he broke all known records. The sixty-nine miles were traversed in sixty-eight minutes, without making allowance for the stop at Batavia. Between Looneyville and Grimesville there is a level stretch of track for five miles, and over this distance the train rushed in four and a half minutes, or at the rate of a mile in forty-two seconds. Between Grimesville and the forks one mile was covered in thirty-five seconds, or at the rate of one hundred miles an hour.

TRUE STORY OF THE NICKEL PLATE WRECK.

Conductor L. B. Brown, Engineer McCarthy and Brakeman J. Terry, the crew of Nickel Plate train No. 35, which was wrecked at Arnolds early Wednesday morning and which accident caused the death of Brakeman Ora L. Wilson, were unintentionally injured by the accounts of the disaster as published in the city papers. The statements of the city press, had they been correct, would lead well informed railroaders to the opinion that the above gentlemen had not used very good judgment when they discovered that their train had broken in two. The accident happened in this way.

Ora L. Wilson was the head brakeman. Following the engine were ten air brake cars, so he had very little to do. When the engineer sounded his whistle at Arnold's Station, Wilson, who was in the cab, started towards the rear of the train and was in the act of passing from the tender to the first car when the shock came and he fell to the track. This was at a point fully one-half mile from the water station, where the engineer intended to stop. By the action of his engine, Mr. McCarthy knew that the train had broken in two, and, fearing a collision, he did not stop at the water station but ran ahead about two miles. No one, until the shock came which knocked Wilson off the car, knew that anything was wrong. When the engineer discovered that the rear portion of the train was not following him, he stopped, and an investigation was commenced. It revealed the fact that the twelfth car from the engine had left the track and this was the cause of the whole trouble. Whether the train broke in two before or after the car left the rails is not known.

SAGE AND IVES AT LAW.

Russell Sage has begun an action in the supreme court against Henry S. Ives, the "Napoleon of Finance", to recover $27,140, being the balance of a promissory note for $100,000 which Ives gave in May, 1887, to Sage for money loaned. Collateral security was put up with the note which was sold and realized according to Mr. Sage, the value of the note, less $27,140. Ives denies this and alleges that the collateral securities which he put up with the note were worth fully $200,000 more than the note and asked judgment for the amount against Mr. Sage. A motion by Mr. Sage for judgment in his favor on the answer was denied by Judge Patterson yesterday.

A. M. Stimson, general agent of the Big Four, has settled with all the persons injured in the accident at Lafayette on Sunday morning. The sums ranging from $25 to $100. The damage to equipment has been placed at $12,000 by the officers of the road, and William Garstang, superintendent of motive power, says $1,500 will repair the locomotive.

It has always been a surprise that John Newell, president of the Lake Shore, did not keep up with the times in the matter of heavy locomotives. A friend of his, in speaking of it, said that he was a civil engineer and takes great pride in having a smooth track, which has prejudiced him against heavy locomotives, particularly excessive weight on any one pair of drivers. The five engines just received to haul the fast trains between Buffalo and Chicago weigh but 100,000 pounds, have 17x24 cylinders and six foot driving wheels.

MAGIC EYE-GLASS

It Mystifies Those Who Do Not Understand Its Simplicity.

A little box containing four numbers is handed to an assistant, who is asked to place the numbers in the box in whatever order he pleases, and to close the lid. The guessing-glass, which is set in a little tube like the one shown in the sketch and marked No. 1 is placed on top of the box, and at once indicates the numbers correctly, 4,123. In order to operate promptly a little compass is dropped into the tube, unknown to the spectators. Each numbered block contains a magnetic bar concealed from view. As soon as the tube is placed on top of each number, the magnetic needle points in the opposite direction from the magnet contained in the numbered block. The needle takes four different positions, corresponding with those of the four numbers in the box.

This little toy is by no means new, although it has only lately been revived. It was a favorite trick with the magicians of the seventeenth century, and is as mystifying today to those who have never seen it before.

KING ALCOHOL, THE CRUEL.

Sobs of Children His Music, Poverty and Death Favors He Bestows.

King Alcohol sits on his throne and rules with a rod of iron. He strikes to kill and always strikes where he can not fail. To his [illegible] poverty, disease and death are [illegible] the favors he bestows on his subjects. He is as heartless as famine, pitiless as pestilence and cruel as death. When Rome was burning, Nero got his melodies out of the fiddle, but this king gets his music from the sobs of children, the cry of the broken-hearted and the awful crash of doomed souls. Come with me and behold one of his victims. I was told that a man lay dying from drink, in a dismal cellar in one of the foulest streets of the city. An outside cellar door, with stone steps which led down from the sidewalk, gave me entrance to a dark, dismal hole in the ground. A woman stood within, and I said, "They tell me some one is dying here."

"Yes, he is in the back room."

"Back room! Great heavens, can there be anything back of this?"

I made my way into the black hole. A candle standing on the head of a barrel gave but a faint glimmer to the foul air, and I had to wait to get used to the darkness. A groan from a corner showed me where one of the king's victims lay on a little straw spread on the damp floor. I went over to him, knelt by his side, reached over and grasped his bony hand and said, "My brother, they tell me you are dying."

He snatched his hand away and said, "I am a dying wretch, but for God's sake don't insult me."

"Insult you! How have I insulted you?"

"When you call a wretch like me brother, it is an insult, for you don't mean it. I am brother to no man, and no man is brother to me."

"Give me your hand, for you are my brother. God is your father and mine. Christ died to save you and me. The gospel is good news for us both. Let me hold your hand while I pray for my brother."

"Too late for that. I am beyond all hope. Drink has been my ruin and my curse, and I am lost."

He grew excited, and trying to quiet him I said, "What is your name?"

"I won't tell you my name. I go by such a name, but it's not my real one."

"Why won't you tell me your name?"

"Because I don't want any one to know who I am or how I die."

"Why not? Perhaps you have some one who loves you yet and would want to know."

"No! No!" he cried. "Listen. In a little church—a Presbyterian church—in a little country village over in Pennsylvania an old white haired man stands up every Sunday and preaches this gospel of which you speak. That man is my father, made prematurely old by the ruin of his boy. Back of the church, in a grave, lies my mother. My waywardness broke her heart and sent her to an untimely grave. If my father knew how his only boy died, he would soon be alongside of my mother. I won't tell you who I am. I am beyond the hope of mercy. Drink has been my ruin. You come too late—too late."

He lay dead. A nameless grave in potter's field contains the body of some preacher's boy. And since that day, 16 years ago, 2,000,000 more have gone down the same road.

Yet the king still sits on his throne and laughs over the ruin that makes heaven weep. "How long, O Lord, how long?"—Rev. C. H. Mead in Christian Herald.

Temperance Theses.

Drinking is not a sin; drunkenness is. Moderate drinking often leads to excessive drinking—that is, to drunkenness—but by no means always, and, taking the whole world over, in only a minority of cases. But the number of such cases is so large and the evil is so great that prudence counsels abstinence. But, more than prudence, love counsels abstinence. Especially in America, with its stimulating climate, its excitable people, its drinking customs, its liquor traffic interested to extend drinking and to stimulate trade and not scrupulous as to methods, he who lives that he may minister to, not be ministered unto, and who believes that he has liberty, but should not use his liberty for an occasion to the flesh, should be always willing to deprive himself of what little pleasure wine gives him and, except in unusual case, of what supposed benefit it gives him, for the sake of others who may be led by his liberty into servitude and perhaps death.—Christian Union.

Dangers of Moderate Drinking.

Sir William Gull, the late honored physician to the queen, gave this warning word: "There is a great deal of injury done to health by the habitual use of wines and alcohol in its various shapes, even in so called moderate quantities. People are injured by drink without being drunkards. There is a point short of drunkenness in which a man may injure his constitution considerably by means of alcohol.

"A man may drink day by day and almost kill himself with drink, and even his near friends not know it. I hardly know any more potent cause of disease than alcohol. There is disease of the liver, which is of very common occurrence, and then from disease of the liver we get disordered conditions of the blood, and consequent upon that we get diseased kidneys, we get a diseased nervous system, we get gout, and we get a diseased heart."

The Birth of Morn.

The light fades gently from the young moon's face,
The starry trail steals from Night's embrace,
And o'er her form in deep, soft velvet fold,
Cloud curtains spread of crimson and of gold.
But from the woods' slumberous, fragrant wood
Come notes tempestuous, and the solitude
Is riven by a thousand gladsome songs,
When feathered minstrels reassemble in throngs.
On hilltop and in meadow starred wide,
Where clovers blossom and wild roses hide,
By orchard blossoms o'er fields of rustling corn
The sunlight dimples like golden tide—
And, lo, 'tis morn!
—Leaves of Gold.

Why He Died.

"My hired man was kicked in the stomach by a horse, stung by a swarm of hornets, and run over by a mowing machine one day, and died the next."

"My! What was the cause of his death?"

"Nervous prostration."—Cleveland Town Topics.

Easy As Can Be

—washing with Pearline. Just try it and see. None of the rub, rub, rub that made the old washboard hateful. None of the old washboard, either. Nothing but common sense washing of clothes, paint, dishes, anything in the house—with something that takes out the dirt, instead of making you rub it out. It's a big difference. There's a saving in the labor—but besides that, there's a saving in the wear.

Washing with acids and chemicals is easy, too—but it's not safe. Washing with Pearline is.

Canaries and Cayenne.

A well-known German naturalist, Dr. Sauermann, has published a number of curious observations on the artificial coloration of canary birds fed with cayenne pepper. The plumage changes from yellow to red. The pepper contains an oily matter and an irritating principle, and when these are extracted by maceration the pepper loses its coloring property, but if olive oil be added to the macerated pepper its coloring property returns. Hence the oil is considered the vehicle of the color. White hens treated in the same way also become reddish, and the yolks of their eggs become a bright red.—The Great Divide.

The Snuff Habit Growing.

Snuff appears once more to be taking a step toward favor; the domestic production in our own country steadily increases. Annie—Why did you refuse Mr. Specie? I am sure the presents and flowers he has sent you show him to be in love with you. Belle—I was afraid he had spent all of his money on me already.

Crushed to Death.

Another gale struck Erie, Pa., the other day, blowing at a fifty-five-mile-an-hour rate. Great damage was done to buildings, forest and fruit trees. The only casualties reported occurred at Johnsonburg, a town on the line of the Philadelphia and Erie railroad. Mr. Harry Hutchinson, finding a gas leak under his house, which was set upon temporary blocks, crawled under to investigate. His wife started under the house to deliver a wrench to her husband, and when the gale struck that section it threw the house off its pins, crushing Hutchinson and his wife to death.

The other evening as George Quidor, the Nickel Plate engineer, was leading his horse, a frisky two-year old, into the barn at his West Wayne street home, he touched the animal with the whip to hasten its motion. He succeeded in moving the animal but in the wrong direction. The two year old let fly with both feet and landed a kick square in Quidor's face, cutting a large gash directly beneath the right eye. When Mrs. Eleanor Kirk Ames was asked by a New York reporter the other day if she started in life with the intention of being a writer, her face took on an amused expression, in which there was a little shade of sadness, as she answered: "Indeed, I did not. My desire and expectation pointed to a domestic life; indeed, more domestic than social, for even as a girl I cared very little for general society." Mrs. Ames went on to tell how she had been compelled to take up her pen to earn a living. Her first story was written for Harper's. She received a check for $25 in payment for it. This money went to pay rent and bought food and shoes and comforts for her children. That was the starting point. She now owns, edits and publishes a paper herself. This is called Eleanor Kirk's Idea, and was a success from the beginning. Indeed, it is said to be first paper that ever paid for itself the first year. Mrs. Ames has also written several books and published them herself.

At a meeting of the Woman's Club League yesterday afternoon, at the Morton club rooms, the following officers were elected: President, Mrs. C. R. Interesting papers were read by delegates from the different clubs on "Club Culture and What it May Lead To." Delegates from the literary clubs of the league read short papers on "What Work May be Properly and Profitably Undertaken by Club Women," and delegates from the art and musical clubs read articles on "The Influence of the Art Club and Musical club on the Community." The public library was again spoken of and it was decided to place copies of the petition to the council for the library at the Fort Wayne club rooms and at the store of the Lehman Book and News company, so that anyone wishing to do so might have an opportunity of signing it.

ACTS LIKE A CAT!

The Peculiar Paroxysms of a Hartford City Lad.

Elkhart Lovers Who Keep Their Marriage a Secret—News From Different Parts of the State.

Some months ago the peculiar paroxysms with which Willie Smith, near Hartford City, is suffering, were detailed. Many months before he had been bitten by a strange cat, and nearly twelve months afterward the paroxysms began to be noticed. During their continuance he would mew and purr, and also spit and glare like an enraged cat. The attacks frequently would last several hours, after which the lad would recover his normal condition, apparently none the worse for his strange experience. Yesterday there was a return of the peculiar attack, the first for several months. It seized him while he was in the woods, and the lad climbed a tree, where he remained for three hours, spitting and snarling, and oblivious to his surroundings. His father used every means possible to induce him to come down, and finally withdrew. The lad then climbed down and when found by the family he was asleep in a fence corner. He remembered nothing of the experience through which he had passed.

When the late Wilson M. Tyler, president of the Vincennes National bank, wrecked that concern and then committed suicide, his widow voluntarily relinquished her rights to the banker's estate, and the homestead, life insurance and other assets were surrendered, altogether aggregating about $65,000. The life insurance was collected and the homestead was sold, but much valuable real estate still remains. Recently Mrs. Tyler, who is now living in Missouri, revoked the power of attorney which she had given George I. Neptune, and she will demand her right to her own property and in what remains of the estate of her late husband.

The local lodge of the Brotherhood of Firemen of Terre Haute last night again considered the Debs matter, more particularly the character of the interview which was given to the press two weeks ago, relative to the action taken on charges which had been preferred. It was then stated that he had been indorsed. The lodge authorized the statement denying the report that Mr. Debs had been or would be expelled, but no affirmative action was taken indorsing him or his interview.

Ed Evans, of Terre Haute, under sentence to eight years' imprisonment, slipped the hand cuff from the wrist of his fellow prisoner, while they were being escorted to the depot, and took to his heels. The officer clung to the remaining prisoner and did not give pursuit. Some hours later Evans was recaptured. He had succeeded in filing off the hand cuffs, and was in a fair way to make good his escape.

The Y. M. C. A. board of directors of Richmond, Ind., met to hear a report from the committee of three ministers who have been canvassing the city for $10,000, necessary to keep the association here from going under. The committee could only raise $50. The work was so discouraging that they gave it up. The board ordered the finance committee to close up the association.

Friends gathered at the residence of Charles Walley, of Elkhart, to witness the marriage of Miss Hattie Walley and Benjamin Lyons, but as the minister was preparing to begin the ceremony the young people announced that they were married at Cassopolis, Mich., in August last. There was no second ceremony. The marriage had been kept a profound secret.

The hod carriers and teamsters of Columbus are on a strike, the factories are reducing the number of employes, and the Pennsylvania Railway company is cutting down, making the outlook for labor very doubtful in Columbus.

As the result of a drunken wrangle at Lyford, John McCurdy shot Charles Gray in the thigh, inflicting a dangerous wound. McCurdy fled to avoid arrest. Both are miners.

A patent medicine hawker, styling himself Dr Charles Fanola, was severely criticised by the Laporte Star, and meeting Editor Goodman on the street there was a swift encounter, which resulted in the editor beating a retreat. Dr Fanola was arrested and fined.

Mrs Nellie C. Payne, of Fowler, convicted of attempting to kill her husband, has been transferred to the female reformatory.

The new suburb to be built by the Sheerin Shiel et al. syndicate at Anderson, will be known as East Anderson.

Bert Jaggers, of Terre Haute, is insane. He claims that some woman is pursuing him.

Mrs C C. Crooks, of Elkhart, awoke to find her infant child dead in her arms.

The Citizens' Electric Street railway of Muncie was completed in fifty-five days.

THAT TIRED FEELING!

With hands both weary and worn,
And his tires both empty and flat,
Pumping away—Pump! Pump! Pump!
In the weeds by the roadside he sat.

Pump! Pump! Pump!
Every time he goes for a ride;
Pump! Pump! Pump!
The air that won't stay inside.

How he wishes he'd purchased a wheel
With tires that give one a rest—
Cushion tires are built that way,
And it PAYS to buy the BEST.
